

The 4th Annual Tokyo Sustainable Seafood Symposium to be held on November 1, gathering stakeholders and business leaders to one of the largest sustainable seafood events in Asia and the world

Tokyo, Japan. (October 19, 2018)

Seafood Legacy Co., Ltd. and Nikkei ESG are hosting the 4th annual Tokyo Sustainable Seafood Symposium, one of the largest business centered sustainable seafood events in Asia and the world, on November 1, 2018, in Tokyo. This annual conference brings together business leaders, academics, NGOs, and government officials throughout Japan and the world to discuss the issues surrounding smarter management of global fisheries resources. This 1day event welcomes both speakers and audience participants from around the world and is simultaneously translated.

Since the inception of the Sustainable Seafood Symposium in 2015, this event quickly became a flagship event to celebrate Japan's emerging sustainable seafood movement. This year, the symposium welcomes over 70 speakers from all over the world to share the new global trends and initiatives from Japan, Asia, and the world.

"We are excited to gather the global stakeholders of sustainable seafood in Japan, one of the largest seafood markets in the world to celebrate the great initiatives in Japan and the world," said Wakao Hanaoka, CEO of Seafood Legacy. "This event provides a great insight of current status of Japan's sustainable seafood market to international guests. We have been witnessing a significant increase in market and civil engagement in the past few years."

The 2018 symposium will kick off with several keynote speeches to introduce emerging topics such as social responsibility, domestic producers, and Tokyo 2020. Government officials are also addressing IUU fishing control and SDGs. The afternoon break-out sessions will focus on specific topics such as ESG investment, SeaBOS initiatives, sustainable eel consumption, corporate branding, certification schemes, IoT, and more.
